Dorothy Dix Says

The Second Strongest Desire of a Wife is to be Treated as a Doll Baby, Yet a Seeress.

By DOROTHY DIX, The World's Highest Paid Woman Writer

The first desire of a wife, as I showed in my previous article, is to be treated as a perpetual bride when she is a grandmother.

The second desire of a wife is to be treated as a doll baby, yet a seeress. Now the mistake that the average husband makes is that he treats his wife either as a doll baby or as a rational human being, and he never finds out that she is not altogether either one or the other, but that she is partly both.

No woman is wholly a fool, and no woman is wholly wise, but every woman displays unexpected and startling bursts of intelligence and silliness. In fact, it may be said that the normal feminine mind is built after the plan of the best Irish bacon—a streak of lean and a streak of fat. Which is the reason that it is so piquant and appetizing a dish on the menu of life.

Only a few men, who have themselves much of the feminine temperament, ever sense this great initial fact that you cannot deal with a woman on the same platform on which you can deal with a man, because what a man is, he is, but what a woman is, she isn't. Therefore, the average good husband, loving his wife and anxious to do his duty by her and make her happy, goes blundering into the mistake of treating her in exactly the same way she doesn't want to be treated, and that makes her get that wishful Reno look on her face.

Suppose the man, for instance, is of the David Copperfield type who has a predilection for baby faced girls, with large, adoring eyes and a cute way of looking up at a man so that he feels about seven feet high, and that he has the chest measure of Jess Willard. Of course, child wives are a lot more alluring, and fascinating as sweethearts than they are as wives, and after the man gets his bargain home he is apt to wish that he had made another choice.

But, be that as it may, he is a just man and a good sport. He realizes that such as his wife is, he picked her out from all the multitude of women and married her of his own accord, so he doesn't propose to blame her for the qualities she is shy in. So he accepts her as a doll baby, and does the best he can by his pretty little toy.

If she makes an intolerable mess of housekeeping, and can't manage servants or cook herself, he stores the furniture and goes to a hotel to live, however much he may pine for a real home. He heroically toils overtime to dress his little doll in fine clothes and give her an automobile to ride in. He listens patiently to her twaddling talk and trots around with her to parties that he loathes and generally keeps his pretty little plaything in cotton wool even after the years have begun to wear off the red paint and the gliding.

The man hasn't a doubt but what his little doll considers herself a very bappy and lucky little doll, but she doesn't, for the very good reason that the human doll, after all, isn't really stuffed with sawdust. Somewhere in its anatomy there is a heart and a brain, even if they are not very big ones.

The doll baby wife may be silly, but she isn't fool enough not to know that she is nothing but a toy to her husband, that she is not a real wife. She knows that she is outside of his life, not the center of it, and that she knows nothing of what he really thinks, what his real aspirations are, what he really hopes and plans. She knows that he wouldn't turn to her if he needed advice or someone on whom to lean.

And the knowledge cuts her like a knife. She resents her husband regarding her as his mental inferior. She resents his treating her like a child. She would like to be chums with him, and to feel that he enjoyed talking with her, not because he had a husband's fondness for her, but because he found her conversation interesting. And she would be flattered to death if he would ask her advice about his business affairs.

True, she still wants to be babied, to be petted and cajoled, and relieved of responsibility, and for her husband not to expect too much of her, because she is his child wife, but at the same time she desires to be also treated as a companion, and something of an oracle by right of woman's mystical intuition, in which nobody believes so thoroughly as women themselves. And because the poor husband isn't mind reader enough to know when to treat her as if she were a Solomon in petticoats, innumerable women consider that they are mistreated and have failed to find their affinities.

Nor is the man who assumes that an intelligent, well educated woman of voting age can be treated like a rational human being any more successful in his solving of the matrimonial problem than is the man who thinks that a woman should be treated as a doll baby.

The man who is married to a sensible, practical girl congratulates himself upon his acumen. He thinks he can dispose with all of the lying and chicanery and subtleties that make domesticity so burdensome to so many men.

He thinks that he can tell his wife the plain, unvarnished truth, and that she will be intelligent enough to prefer it to transparent flattery. He thinks that she will be broad enough not to be consumed by petty jealousies and to realize that a man is not in love with every pretty woman that he meets. He thinks that she will have wisdom enough to perceive that the test of a man's real affection is not what he says to a wife, but what he does for her.

So the man begins his married life by treating his wife as he would treat a business partner. He talks to her of the state of the green grocery trade instead of telling her that her eyes are stars from heaven. He shoulders on her half of the work and the responsibility of the joint business. He criticizes her mistakes, and holds her down on the luxuries of her department.

He is paying her the highest compliment of which he is capable, for he is taking it for granted that she is putting into the new firm that they have organized just as much brain and energy and ability as he is. He is making her his helpmeet, his friend, his comrade, and he never doubts but what she is tickled to death over the tribute he is laying at her feet.

But is the woman proud over being treated as her husband's equal? She is not. She is humiliated to the earth because she thinks that in her husband's eyes she is not a figure of romance, and because he does not pay her the flowery compliments that the doll baby woman receives from her husband.

Not that she wants to give up what she has got. Oh, dear, no. She is perfectly willing to make the bread, but she wants her husband to butter it with romance and sentiment and flattery, and if she fails to do it, she beats upon her breast and cries out that she is heart hungry and starved for love.

And it keeps a man guessing when to treat his wife as if she were a thrifty idiot, and when a seeress. And he generally treats her wrong.

The third way a wife would like to be treated—but we'll talk of that in the next article.

WOMEN! TRY IT! SAVE 5 DOLLARS

Says gasoline and solvite in washboiler dry cleans everything.

Ever dry clean at home? Well, it's so easy, inexpensive and the results so pleasing you'll be surprised. Any woman can clean and renew the brightness of ribbons, silks, satins, laces, yokes, silk shirtwaists, kid gloves and shoes, furs, neckties, children's coats, suits, caps, swiss, lawn, organdy and chiffon dresses, fancy vests, veils, woolen garments, network, draperies, rugs, in fact, any and everything that would be ruined with soap and water.

Get two ounces of solvite at any drug store and put it in two gallons of gasoline where it quickly dissolves. Then put in the goods to be cleaned, rub a little and out they come looking as bright and fresh as new. You will find nothing fades, shrinks or wrinkles, requiring no pressing.

Any woman can do five dollars' worth of home dry cleaning in a few moments and you can't make a mistake. Your grocer or any garage will supply the gasoline and the drug store will sell you two ounces of solvite which is simply a gasoline soap. Then a wash boiler or large dish pan completes your dry-cleaning outfit.

NEW LOCOMOTIVES FOR S. P. COMPANY

Anticipating the heavy demand that the national crisis will make upon the resources of the railroads, the Southern Pacific company has placed an order for eleven additional locomotives for delivery this year in time to assist in the heavy crop movement.

The new engines will be the largest single locomotives on the system, only exceeded in size and power by the huge mallets, which are really a combination of two engines.

Designed particularly for increasing hauling capacity at high speed, the new locomotives will enable the Southern Pacific to expedite freight service and better handle passenger trains on grade.

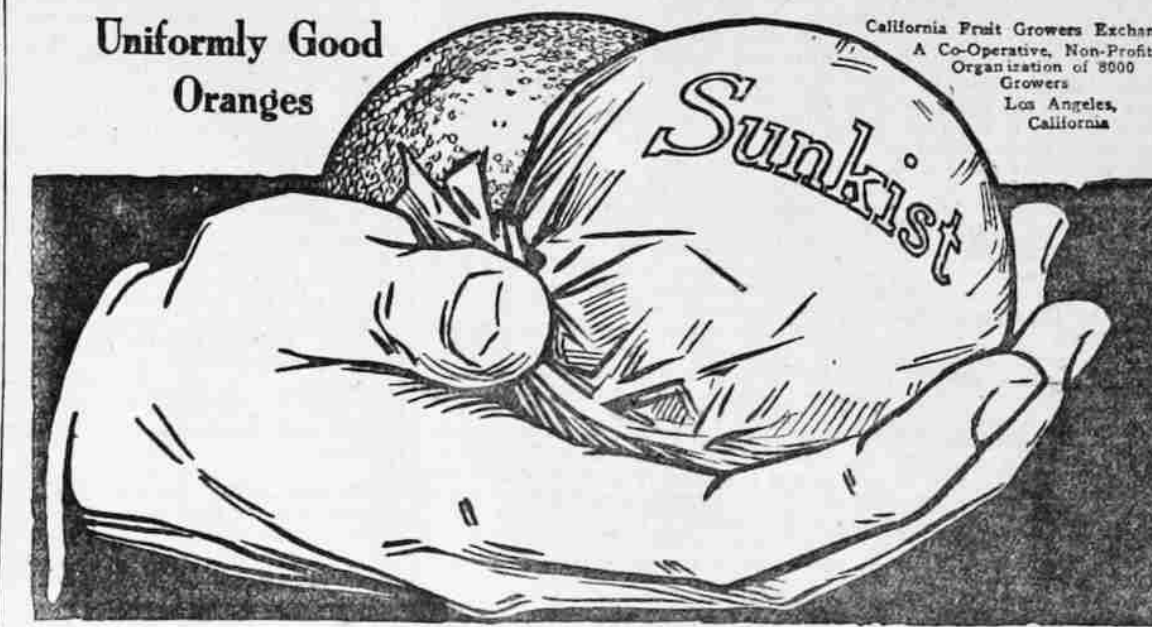

The necessity for meeting the national crisis has compelled the railroads to purchase their material in the highest market the country has ever known.

EAT ONLY TWO MEALS A DAY SAYS LOCAL BUSINESS MAN

One well known business man of Ogden, who practices what he preaches, believes the high cost of living is partially due to over-eating. He says:

Two Meals a Day.
"Most people eat too much. It is true that there are several million people in the United States who are under-nourished because they are poverty stricken and do not have enough to eat."

"Among the rest of the people, however, over-eating is almost universal. When a person is engaged in doing hard manual labor and has a long workday, it may be that he needs three meals a day. But even he would do well to eat less food, and chew it instead of bolting it.

"Manual workers who have workdays of reasonable length do not need three meals a day. On account of their physical labor they can handle three meals better than mental workers. But they would be better off with two."

"Mental workers are the greatest sufferers from over-eating. Not that they are more given to stuffing themselves than other people are, but they do not have an opportunity to work off the surplus by exercising their bodies. It is therefore exceedingly important that they should recognize the disastrous results of gormandizing and apply the remedy."

"The best remedy, I think, is to cut out one meal a day."

"Within the past few years this plan has been tried by a great many persons. The results have been highly satisfactory. Some omit the noonday meal. Others omit breakfast. The omission of breakfast seems to be satisfactory to the greatest number."

"I have omitted breakfast for so many years that I had almost forgotten that there is such a thing. It is a matter of habit. I have no more desire for breakfast than I have for a coat of mail, or any other discarded burden. And I have splendid health. Of course I also do all sorts of other stunts in order to maintain it. Instead of eating breakfast I drink a glass of water. It tastes a thousand times better than ham and eggs. Then instead of having to fool away an hour in waiting for breakfast and eating it, I have plenty of time to take a most enjoyable walk in the open air before going to work."

"This plan also gives an opportunity to drink plenty of water during the forenoon, without interfering with the digestive operations. If a feeling of hunger comes on, a glass of water will banish it instantly. The poor, over-worked stomach and intestines get a rest. They and the rest of the organism also get a much needed bath. The whole body is healthier. And the intellect is keener."

AT IT BRIGHT AND EARLY.
"When you go home full, what does your wife say to you?"
"Nothing."
"Lucky man."
"She waits till the morning."—Boston Transcript.
